

Singapore

5 September 2024

Singapore's July retail sales rebounded 1.0% YoY (3.1% MoM sa), but was largely driven by auto sales.

Highlights:

- Retail sales rose 1.0% YoY (3.1% MoM sa) in July, rebounding from June's contraction of 0.6% YoY (-3.7% MoM sa). However, this July print disappointed the Bloomberg consensus forecast of 1.3% YoY, but is stronger than our -1.3% YoY forecast. The key contributor was auto sales which jumped 27.2% YoY (21.7% MoM sa), whilst petrol stations, food & alcohol, supermarkets & hypermarkets, and watches & jewellery also eked out modest positive sales growth. That said, sales of food & alcohol have slowed quite dramatically from the double-digit growth seen in 1H24 to only 4.7% YoY in July.
- Retail sales excluding motor vehicles actually fell 2.3% YoY (0.5% MoM sa), marking the second straight month of declines. Notably, there were weak sales across other industries which were dragged down by lower appetite for shopping at department stores (-11.2% YoY) and wearing apparel & footwear (-10.3% YoY), as well as optical goods & books (-8.7% YoY). This reinforces the softening domestic consumption picture after a buoyant 1Q24 due to the spate of concerts. The gradually cooling domestic labour market conditions coupled with the strong SGD may have contributed to households tightening their belts as well as potentially diverted some spending overseas, including across the Causeway.
- Retail sales rose only 1.9% YoY for January-July 2024, lower than the 3.1% YoY for the same period in 2023. With a tepid start to July retail sales, 3Q24 retail sales are tipped to only expand ~1.4% YoY (even with F1 taking place later in September) while 4Q24 may recover to 4.5% YoY given the traditional peak holiday and festive season, as well as more MICE events generally anticipated in 2H24. This would likely bring full-year 2024 retail sales growth to around 2-3%, which is similar to the 2.3% YoY seen in 2023. With COE A & B premiums both creeping higher in August and September, this could dampen the strength of auto sales going ahead. As for the retail trade outlook in the recent business expectations survey for services firms, it was the second lowest in terms of optimism at +4% after real estate (+1%). In particular, their operating revenue and employment forecasts for 3Q24 was similarly soft at +2% and +3% respectively.
